A large concentration of Soviet armor was noticed approximately two and a half kilometers out of Arad, near the Hungarian-Rumanian border. Special railroad lines lead into the cantonment, which is guarded by Soviet soldiers bearing submachine guns. Type of armor located there is described as medium and heavy, and it is estimated that a minimum of two armored divisions is located in that vicinity. Soviet personnel observed on Rumanian trains invariably belong to armored units or specialized groups, such as radio technicians, engineers, et cetera.
